Location:

The village of Almyrida is 23 km away. east of Chania, on the southern shores of Souda Bay and 1 km. west of the village of Plaka. It is a quiet resort, with the necessary facilities and excellent sea. The unspoilt, countryside and lush olive groves around Almyrida are ideal for a stroll.

Almyrida was first settled by the Phoenicians, many centuries ago, and traces of their settlements can be seen on the slope of Mavroharakas. Until recently, it was just a fishing village, with about 50-100 inhabitants. Thanks to its wonderful Mediterranean climate, these two clean, sandy beaches and beautiful nature, the village has recently turned into a tourist resort. Almyrida is now famous for its fresh fish taverns and local delicacies, as well as the quality of its nightlife. The natural surroundings and neighboring villages offer endless hours of hiking and exploring, although there is always one or the other traditional feast or festival with national food, music and dance.

The most important archaeological site of the ruins at Almyrida are the Basilicas of the early Christian era (sixth century AD), with fine mosaic floors that have been preserved. On the hill of Finikias, above the site of the basilica, you can see the ruins of a Greco-Roman city. Greco-Roman ruins have also been found on the islet of Karga, not far from Almyrida.
